1. The residents of all North Korean areas are antagonistic to the ROK and U. S. military forces because of the thoroughness and quantity of Korean Communist propaganda, which has emphasized the righteousness of the North Korean cause and the inevitability of victory, and has concealed North Korean losses.
2. In the rural area of North Korea where land reform has been carried out, the small farmers fear that in the event of a ROK victory they will lose the land which they had gained.
3. In both industrial and rural North Korean areas the people are completely hostile to UN forces and feel that the ROK government represents foreigners. There is no effective opposition to the Communists since dissidents have been eliminated and those hesitating to accept the Communist government have been convinced gradually by propaganda and social pressure.
